

Encounters with different groups in the ancient Mediterranean led the Greeks and Romans to try to define and construct their own identity, culturally speaking, as well as the alterity of other peoples, through the overlapping categories of ethnicity and gender. This book explores the intersection of ethnicity and gender in the articulation of Greek and Roman socio-cultural identities from the archaic period to late antiquity.

THE SERIES: TRENDS IN CLASSICS – SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES

The journal Trends in Classics and the accompanying Supplementary Volumes publish innovative, interdisciplinary work which brings to the study of Greek and Latin texts the insights and methods of related disciplines, such as narratology, intertextuality, reader-response criticism, and oral poetics. Both publications seek to publish research across the full range of classical antiquity.
